Project Report and Contributions

Gengyao Qiu

September 11, 2025

1 Report

During programming, it's very important to make Python code work smooth with some different optional command-line arguments (–write, –read_from_file and –print). Designing the code to handle any combination of these arguments was both crucial and complex. After discussing with my group members, I was able to enhance my code. Now the code can handle any combination of optional arguments, no matter what input order is.

2 Contributions

We contributed equally to this project. Throughout the process, we raised questions, discussed them, and solved problems together. However, we completed the programming tasks, including both coding and writing, independently.